Set the Mood
Think about how the setting determines the mood or atmosphere of a story. Look through your book for a passage that describes the setting. How does the description make you feel?
Now make up your own setting and decide how you want your reader to feel. Anxious? Excited? Content? Think about how you can describe it to make your reader feel a certain way. Remember not to tell your reader how to feel. Instead, make the reader feel a certain way by writing an effective description.
